Living together without having to give up your own space. Having family and friends close by while still being able to close the door and enjoy your privacy. Or living in Andalusia while also having space for guests or rental opportunities. This finca in Casarabonela offers exactly these possibilities, thanks to a layout that is rarely found. The property consists of a semi-detached building with a total of four independent living units. Each of the two mirrored halves has one apartment on the ground floor and another on the upper floor. Four separate living spaces under one roof, surrounded by the peaceful mountain scenery of Andalusia. In total, the property offers six bedrooms, six bathrooms and two guest toilets. Spacious living and dining areas, kitchens and different layouts provide plenty of room for everyday life, spending time together and enjoying your own privacy. This layout is precisely what makes the property so interesting. Several generations can live together without constantly sharing the same living areas. Family and friends can stay for extended periods while maintaining their own routines. Alternatively, you could live in one part of the property and rent out the other units. And then there is the surrounding landscape. Casarabonela lies amidst a landscape of mountains, hills and wide valleys. Life here is more peaceful. Nature begins practically at your doorstep, and the views stretch far across the surrounding countryside. The spacious covered terrace provides the perfect place to gather. Enjoy a coffee in the morning, relax in the shade at midday or spend the evening outdoors as the temperatures become more pleasant and the tranquillity gradually returns. The plot also offers plenty of space. There is room for a garden, for your own ideas or simply to enjoy the openness and privacy that make country living so special. The property also benefits from its own well and an additional 1,000-litre water storage tank, which complement its water supply. What makes this estate special is the combination of shared living and independence. Not everyone wants a large house where every room revolves around a single living area. Sometimes, it is much nicer when everyone has their own space while still being able to come together whenever they wish. Four homes. Two halves. One shared place. A property for those who need space, value flexibility and can imagine creating something of their own in Andalusia.
